Disability Legislation

The Disability Discrimination Act (1992)

The Commonwealth Disability Discrimination Act (1992) or DDA, administered by the Human Rights and Equal Opportunity Commission, provides for complaints to be made by people with disabilities alleging discrimination on the basis of their disability. The DDA is intended, as much as possible, to attain systemic change through education and example. Its objective is to find solutions for complaints through conciliation.

Section Three of the DDA outlines its objectives as:

(a) to eliminate, as far as possible, the discrimination against persons on the grounds of disability in the areas of:
   - work, accommodation, education, access to premises, clubs and sport;
   - the provision of goods, facilities, services and land; and existing laws;
   - the administration of Commonwealth laws and programs; and

(b) to ensure, as far as practicable, that people with disabilities have the same rights to equality before the law as the rest of the community; and

(c) to promote recognition and acceptance of the principle that people with disabilities have the same fundamental rights as the rest of the community. The Act defines ‘disability’ in relation to a person and makes a distinction between direct and indirect disability discrimination. It acknowledges that ‘different accommodation or services may be required by the person with a disability”.

Disability Standards for Education 2005

The Standards were formulated under the Disability Discrimination Act 1992 (DDA), The Education Standards provide a framework to ensure that students with a disability are able to access and participate in education on the same basis as other students. The Education Standards do this by providing clarity and specificity for education and training providers and for students with a disability.

Scope

The Disability Policy and Procedures applies to all students, staff and representatives of the Institute.
Definitions

Disability:

This definition is inclusive of definitions in the Disability Discrimination Act 1992.

"Disability" A permanent, temporary or episodic disability that is attributable to:

a) a medical condition (eg: epilepsy, asthma);

b) a psychiatric condition;

c) a sensory, physical, cognitive or learning impairment (eg dyslexia);

d) a learning disability;

e) or a combination of such impairments that results in:
   i. a reduced ability to access educational services provided by the (Institute), and
   ii. a need for support to overcome these barriers”.

Disability discrimination occurs when a person discriminates against another person on the grounds of a disability by treating or proposing to treat that person less favourably than they would treat a person without a disability in ‘circumstances that are the same or are not materially different’.

Discrimination also occurs where a person is treated less favourably because of:

- a palliative or therapeutic device;
- an auxiliary aid
- being accompanied by an interpreter, reader, assistant or carer who provides services to the person with a disability;
- being accompanied by a guide dog or any animal trained to assist the person with a disability

Direct discrimination is when a person with a disability is treated less favourably than a person without a disability in the same or similar circumstances.

Indirect discrimination is a requirement or condition or practice that is the same for everyone but has an unfair effect on an individual or group of people.
